Review Test 3

- D. Given below is an adapted extract from The Coral Island written by R. M. Ballantyne. Rewrite this text in the past tense and change the dialogue to reported speech.

One night, just as we enter the tropics, an awful storm bursts upon our ship. The first squall of wind carries away two of our masts, leaving only the foremast upright. For five days the tempest rages in all its fury. Everything is swept off the decks except one small boat. The captain says that he has no idea where we are, as we have been blown far out of our course. At daybreak on the sixth morning of the gale we see land ahead. It is an island encircled by a reef of coral on which the waves break in fury.

‘It’s all over with us now, lads,’ says the captain to the men, ‘get the boat ready to launch; we shall be on the rocks in less than half an hour.’

The men obey in gloomy silence, for they feel that there is little hope of such a small boat surviving on such a sea.

‘Come boys,’ says Jack Martin. We gladly agree to follow Jack, for he inspires us with confidence.
